Biography

I have worked in Education since 1997, initially in schools undertaking various roles including Senior Leadership in a Secondary School, more recently in Higher Education.

I currently lead the Initial Teacher Training Secondary Department at a university in Birmingham which enables me to have a sound understanding of current regional and national practice in Education, through the opportunities presented by working with numerous schools and agencies which shape future provision for school age children.

I have a teaching interest in Inclusion, safeguarding and parental engagement alongside aspects of Educational leadership and management.

I have 2 sons, the eldest benefits hugely from being within the care of the KS3 staff team at Alderman Knight School.

This is the 6th school I've been a governor with since my first appointment as a teacher governor in 1999 and I have undertaken a number of roles through this work.
